

Oregon Humanities Center

2018–19 Robert F. and Evelyn Nelson Wulf Professorship in the Humanities

Wulf Professorship Objectives

The Wulf Professorship supports the development of new or substantially revised undergraduate courses that identify, examine carefully, and respond critically to ethical issues that confront individuals and society. Such issues might include but are not limited to:

- the structure and bases of human values
- the moral development of individuals
- the nature of character and integrity
- the appreciation of individual rights
- the nature of social responsibility

The Wulf Professorship seeks to promote open, critical examination of differing viewpoints and sets of values in an intellectually rigorous setting.

While Wulf courses must be designed and intended primarily for undergraduates, they may also be open to graduate students.

$4,000 Course Enrichment

The Wulf Professorship provides up to $4,000 for:

- curriculum development
- course enrichment
- guest speakers
- instructional materials
- classroom activities
- related research assistance
- other activities related to the approved course

These funds must be used by the end of the term during which the course is offered. Please note that these course enrichment funds are in lieu of, not in addition to, the regular Teaching Fellowship's $1,000 course enrichment funds.

$4,500 in Summer Salary

Wulf Professors must devote a minimum of four consecutive weeks during the summer of 2018 to course development. In return, they will receive $4,500 (plus OPE) in summer salary support.

Team-Teaching Option

In the case of a team-taught course, each instructor will receive $4,500 (plus OPE) in summer salary for curriculum development. Team-taught courses are eligible for a single Wulf Professorship award of up to $4,000 in course enrichment funds.

Application Process

The Wulf Professorship is awarded annually on a competitive basis in conjunction with an Oregon Humanities Center Teaching Fellowship.

Faculty members wishing to be considered for this fellowship must:

- complete the Wulf Professorship Proposal Statement (see reverse)
- attach the Proposal Statement to the Oregon Humanities Center Teaching Fellowship application

The Wulf Professor(s) will be selected by the Oregon Humanities Center Director in consultation with a review panel drawn from the Center's Advisory Board.
